Kreps, 2023-11-28 Mainstream economics considers individual preferences to be fixed and unchanging Although psychologists and other social scientists explore how tastes are formed influenced and evolve it is not considered proper in orthodox economics to do so Arguing About Tastes makes the case that economists should abandon the principle that preferences are fixed and instead incorporate into their work how context and experience shape individual tastes David M Kreps argues that the discipline must account for dynamic personal tastes when it comes to understanding social exchange emphasizing human resource management and on the job behavior He develops formal models that illustrate the power of intrinsic motivation and show why applying extrinsic incentives can be counterproductive Kreps weighs the advantages and disadvantages of the principle de gustibus non est disputandum there is no arguing about tastes He calls for a new era of economics in which preferences are taken into account and not for granted Arguing About Tastes concludes with responses by the distinguished economists Alessandra Casella and Joseph E Stiglitz and a final reply by Kreps
