SETTING THE STAGE In the wake of the Scientific Revolution, and the new hope of creating a government with more and philosophers began to examine old beliefs about other aspects of society. These sought new insight into the underlying truths regarding government, religion, economics, and education. These efforts spawned the Enlightenment, a new intellectual movement that stressed reason and thought and the power of individuals to solve problems. Known also as the Age of Reason, the movement reached its height in the eighteenth and brought great changes to many aspects of Western civilization.

Two Views on Government

The Enlightenment marked their views key ideas put forth by two English political thinkers of the 17th. Thomas Hobbes and John Locke. Both men expressed the political culture of England early in that century. However, they came to very different conclusions about government and human nature.

Hobbes's Social Contract Thomas Hobbes expressed his views in a book called Leviathan (1651). The theme of the book is that the common good that all humans seek naturally exists and without. Without government or any order, Hobbes said, there would be "war . . . of every man against every man," and life would be "solitary, poor, nasty, brutish, and short."

Hobbes argued that to escape such a bleak life, people had to hand over their rights to a strong ruler. In exchange, they gained law and order. Hobbes called this agreement the "social contract." A government that protects people's rights is their most important duty. Hobbes said that the ruler needed total power to keep citizens under control. The best government was one that had the greatest power of a leviathan (sea monster). In Hobbes's view, such a government was an absolute monarchy, which could impose order and prevent rebellion.

Changing Ideas: The Right to Govern

Old idea	New idea
A government is justified by divine right.	A government's power comes from the consent of the governed.
