

Audiences and Reception Theory

By Julie Martin

Stuart Hall's "Encoding-Decoding" model of communication essentially states that meaning is encoded by the sender and decoded by the receiver and that these encoded meanings may be decoded to mean something else. That is to mean, the senders encode meaning in their messages according to their ideals and views and the messages are decoded by the receivers according to their own ideals and views, which may lead to miscommunication or to the receiver understanding something very different from what the sender intended. (Hall 1993, 91)

Hall says that there are three different positions audiences (receivers) take in order to decode the meanings within cultural texts, particularly televisual discourses. They are the dominant-hegemonic position, the negotiated position and the oppositional position. (Hall 1993, 101)

The dominant-hegemonic position is when the viewer, or audience member, is located within the dominant point of view. (Hall 1993, 101) Within this position, there is little misunderstanding and miscommunication, as both sender and receiver are working under the same rule set, assumptions and cultural biases. It is this position that will allow the transmission of ideas to be understood the best, despite certain frictions that may occur due to issues of class structure and power, specifically between the elites who are able to dictate the rule set and the non-elites who must adopt the elite's rules as dominant. (Hall 1993, 101)

The negotiated position is when the audience member, or receiver, is able to decode the sender's message within the context of the dominant cultural and societal views. (Hall 1993, 102) The messages are largely understood, but in a different sense than the dominant-hegemonic position. The receivers in the negotiated position are not necessarily working within the hegemonic viewpoint, but are familiar enough with dominant society to be able to adequately decode cultural texts in an abstract sense. (Hall 1993, 102) However, it is entirely possible for the audience member to decipher the message as a more personal message, which is when their own biases and viewpoints muddy the decoding process. This "near view" of the message usually occurs in certain situations that are close to the audience member, as opposed to the general "long view" they take of cultural texts in the abstract. (Hall 1993, 102)

The oppositional view is when the audience member is capable of decoding the message in the way it was intended to be decoded, but based on their own societal beliefs, often sees another, unintended meaning within the message. (Hall 1993, 103)

Examples of oppositional views in modern television programming are plentiful in Internet discussion communities (either mailing lists or message forums or weblogs). Perhaps the earliest documented cases of modern-day defiant/oppositional views of a television program were in the late 1970s in Star Trek 'zines (fan-produced magazine-like newsletters) which had a tendency to showcase stories that focused on the relationship between Captain Kirk and Mr. Spock on the original Star Trek program from the 1960s. Authors, typically female, often wrote fiction implying or outright stating that Kirk and Spock were lovers, referring to the pairing as K/S, spawning the "slash" genre that usually describes male/male romantic relationships and, sometimes, sexually explicit fiction between the characters. Slash fiction is not limited to males but can also be applied to female/female relationships that are

Teaching Religion and Film Gregory J Watkins, 2008-08-22 In a culture increasingly focused on visual media students have learned not only to embrace multimedia presentations in the classroom but to expect them Such expectations are perhaps more prevalent in a field as dynamic and cross disciplinary as religious studies but the practice nevertheless poses some difficult educational issues the use of movies in academic coursework has far outpaced the scholarship on teaching religion and film What does it mean to utilize film in religious studies and what are the best ways to do it In Teaching Religion and Film an interdisciplinary team of scholars thinks about the theoretical and pedagogical concerns involved with the intersection of film and religion in the classroom They examine the use of film to teach specific religious traditions religious theories and perspectives on fundamental human values Some instructors already teach some version of a film and religion course and many have integrated film as an ancillary to achieving central course goals This collection of essays helps them understand the field better and draws the sharp distinction between merely watching movies in the classroom and comprehending film in an informed and critical way Presence and Desire Jill Dolan, 1993 Explores current controversies and significant concerns in feminist theater and performance
