

1.1 Geological Maps and Cross sections

Topographic maps

- Show elevation above datum (usually sea-level)
- Geomorphological and anthropogenic features shown

Geological maps

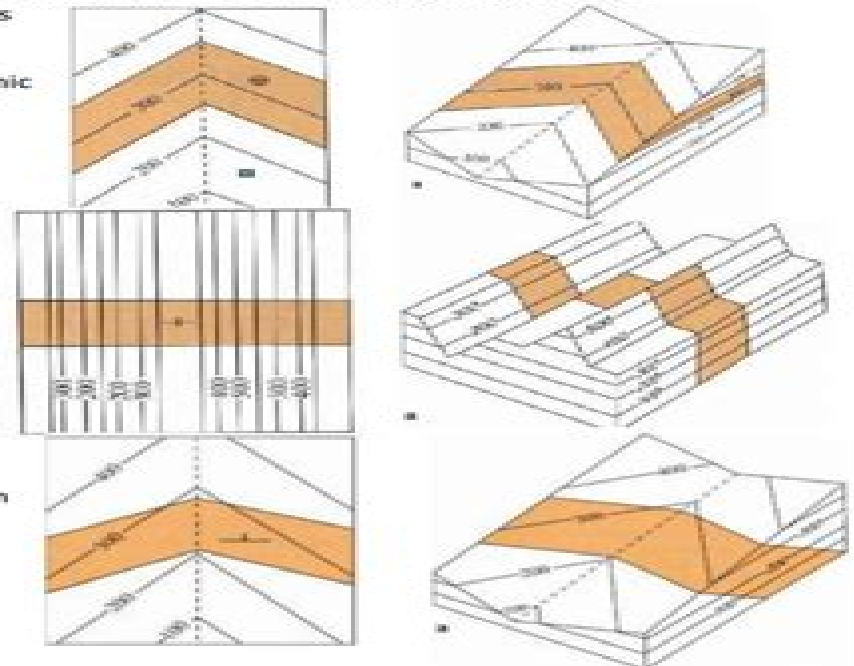

- Show distribution of rock types exposed on surface
- Use different line symbols and rock boundaries to show rock related to each other
- Rock bodies are three dimensional -> extend beneath the surface
- Geologists interpret how this might happen and construct cross-section (inferred geological in vertical slices through the Earth)
- All geological maps should have
 - o Title, author, date
 - o Orientation, north arrow
 - o Scale, coordinate system, grid squares
 - o Legend and geology

Colour schemes

- Rock types are 'grouped' into units with similar characteristics and usually, different colours are distinguished between OR rock formations of different age ie chronologically according to the subdivisions of the geological timescales

Rule of 'V's

- 1) Horizontal layers follow contours of topographic exactly "as if they are bound by the imaginary lines"
- 2) Vertical layers cut across topography without deflection, appears straight on a map
- 3) Layers that dip in the upstream direction, form an upstream directed 'v' on the map
