ABSTRACT

1. BACKGROUND

The Design Guidelines For Public Transport Facilities project forms part of the Public Transport Planning, Design and Implementation Programme of the City of Cape Town. This programme is intended to form the basis of the a approach and aimed ultimately to effect the fundamental restructuring of public transport networks, services and facilities (the Mobility Strategy). This strategy was focused on the transformation and restructuring of public transport in Cape Town, with particular emphasis on:

- Placing public transport, people and quality of life first
- Integrating of all modes of public transport – rail, bus, mini-bus taxis, non-motorised transport (NMT) and not excluding cars, freight and business
- Pursuing sustainable transport through investment in low cost forms of mobility

The Design Guidelines for Public Transport Facilities project has set the following objectives:

- Develop a practical guide for the process of designing facilities;
- Establishing an approach towards public transport interchange or facility design which considers it in its total urban context;
- Take into account the requirements of recapitalisation vehicles;
- Learn from the performance of recently constructed facilities, to build on positive, and avoid negative experiences; and
- Focus on the needs of pedestrians as the basic functioning component at public transport stops and interchanges.

2. THE NATURE OF INTERCHANGE

2.1 The urban meaning of interchange

While interchanges play an important functional role in transportation management, they are also very important elements of urban structure and need to be used structurally to improve the performance of the city.

From a design perspective, they have a number of characteristics which need to inform their conceptualisation:

- They are people places: they are significant places of gathering and the generation of pedestrian flows.
- They are places of waiting: comfort is therefore a central design issue.
