Dec. 19 2022

Note 1: The notations without extra guidance in this exam are consistent with those in class.

Note 2: All answers must be explained, or no points will be given.

1. Signaling games

There are a frog and a princess. The frog could either say he was a 'prince' or a 'frog.' The princess could either kiss the frog, in which case he might turn into a prince. Or, she could eat him. It was well known that 10% of the frogs in the kingdom were actually princes who had a spell cast upon them. Only frogs that were actually princes would turn into princes when kissed by a princess. Frogs like to kiss princesses and don't like to be eaten. Frogs who are really princes especially like to kiss princesses (because then frogs turn into princes). Frogs who are not really princes cannot say 'Prince' without taking lessons in elocution. Princesses like to eat frogs, but they prefer to kiss frogs who are really princes. Princesses don't like to kiss frogs who are not princes. Payoffs that are consistent with these facts are shown below.

- Is this a signaling game? If so, who are the sender, the receiver, the signals? Can you tell whether the signals are costly to some types of senders? (10 pts)
- Please whether there are any separating equilibria. (10 pts)
- Please whether there are any pooling equilibria. (10 pts)

2. Common valuations
