

Isolation in Mrs. Dalloway by Virginia Woolf

7 pages | 1534 words

In the book Mrs. Dalloway by Virginia Woolf, each character feels isolated in their own unique way. Many of them are linked by culture, social class, history, love, or hardship which creates a feeling of loneliness in the world. The detachment and outsideness that characters feel throughout the novel brings deep feelings of fear that the entire world is against them. Woolf uses the structure of the Post World War I's societal and political environment to create the problems, interactions, feelings, and behaviors that characters in the novel face and represent. The British people were extremely conventional, and a pecking order was observed after World War I. British citizens were to be mindful of their place in that social ladder. The upper class was perceived to have money and was willing to do things at their own pleasure because they were the ones with the wealth. They cherished their families, and most came from royalty or aristocracy. But, the working class often compared themselves to the upper class lifestyle and realized they will never be able to move up the ladder. Because of this they hid their feelings and emotions, becoming outsiders. Early on in the novel Woolf paints a picture depicting this for the reader. She writes, "The King and Queen were at the Palace. And everywhere, though it was still so early, there was a breathing, a stirring of galloping ponies, tapping of cricket bats; Lords, Ascot, Ranelagh and all the rest of it, the whirling young men, and laughing girls in their transparent muslins, discreet dowagers were shooting out in their motor cars on errands of mystery; and the shopkeepers were fidgeting in their windows" (5). This quote suggests the British citizens found assurance in the customs of the British conglomerate. Everyone in the town seemed to display a sense of ease in their life and were active out and about, enjoying their days and not having a care in the world. However, because of the hierarchy, most characters in the book held back their true feelings and expressions from within and acted without putting their feelings first. It is almost as if they had masks on and their true identity and feelings were deep beneath what one could see from what they looked and presented themselves like on the outside. One of the biggest individual oppressors in the novel and someone who does well at making others feel victimized is Sir William Bradshaw. His image stood for everything the typical upper-class male of the time represented. He was a wealthy physician whose practices reflected upon his controlling and authoritative nature. When his patients came to him with concerns, he told them how to feel and it was always negative. Dr. Bradshaw was concerned with keeping the British way of life like it was. Men were not supposed to suffer and when they did, it was only going to be where no one could see. Exposing their feelings and deprivation made British men considered weak and vulnerable amongst society. He was an embodiment of the English patriarchal oppression that the rest of the characters in the novel...
