Abstract: The purpose of this study was to analyze and find out the effect of critical thinking skills and science skills on digital literacy of class VIII F and VIII G students of SMPN 7 Muaro Jambi in terms of gender. The research method used is a mixed method with an explanatory design. The sampling technique in this study was purposive sampling with a sample of 56 students. The instruments used were critical thinking skills essay tests, KPS observation sheets, digital literacy questionnaires, and interview sheets. The quantitative data analysis technique used is descriptive statistical analysis and inferential statistics, while the qualitative data analysis technique used is the Miles and Huberman technique. The results of multiple linear regression tests show that there is an influence of critical thinking skills and science process skills on digital literacy. From the interview results it is known that critical thinking skills, science process skills, and digital literacy are classified as good. So, it can be concluded that there is a significant influence between critical thinking skills and science process skills on students' digital literacy.

Keywords: Critical Thinking; Digital Literacy; Gender; Science Process Skills.

Introduction

Natural science is one of the compulsory subjects at the junior high school level. Natural science is a science that studies the universe and its contents and events that occur in the surrounding environment through a series of processes of scientific experience such as investigating, compiling and presenting concepts (Arieshandy et al., 2022; Jamaluddin et al., 2019; Mutmainnah et al., 2021). However, there are still many science learning applications that are only directed at achieving knowledge or mastery of concepts, causing students to only be able to memorize concepts in science, but not being able to apply every science concept learned when facing problems in everyday life in natural sciences (Hariri et al., 2019; Lestari et al., 2021; Wardani, 2020). Therefore, in natural learning (IPA), students need to have the ability to think critically in natural sciences lessons because they play an important role in solving a problem regarding science lessons (Heryadi, 2021; Nugraha, 2018). This shows that the natural sciences as one of the sciences that play a role in improving critical thinking skills.

The ability to think critically is one of the skills that are required to be possessed by students in the 21st century (Anggraeni et al., 2021; Handayani et al., 2022; Hidayati et al., 2021). Critical thinking skills are very important for students in learning, especially in learning natural sciences. With the ability to think critically, students are able to interpret, understand, analyze, and solve problems in everyday life and make some appropriate decisions about what to do further (Jannah and Atmojo, 2022; Nur et al., 2022; Warsah et al., 2021). Critical thinking ability consists of several indicators, namely providing simple explanations, building basic skills, concluding, providing further explanations, building strategies and tactics (Hikmawati et al., 2021; Lestari et al., 2021). Besides the ability to think critically, there is also one skill that is required to be possessed by students in the 21st century, namely science process skills.
