- Rousseau
- Montesquieu
- Mary Wollstonecraft

SETTING THE STAGE In the wake of the Scientific Revolution, and the new hope of creating a government, writers and philosophers began to scrutinize old beliefs about other aspects of society. These sought new insight into the underlying truths regarding government, religion, economics, and education. These efforts spawned the Enlightenment, a new intellectual movement that stressed reason and thought and the power of individuals to solve problems. Known also as the Age of Reason, the movement reached its height in the eighteenth and brought great changes to many aspects of Western civilization.

Two Views on Government

The Enlightenment marked three major key ideas put forth by two English political thinkers of the eighteenth century: Thomas Hobbes and John Locke. Both men expressed the political vision of England early in that century. However, they came to very different conclusions about government and human nature.

Hobbes's Social Contract Thomas Hobbes expressed his views in a book called Leviathan (1651). The theme of the English's first big commercial book that all humans were naturally selfish and wicked. British governments in long order, Hobbes said, there would be "war . . . of every man against every man," and life would be "solitary, poor, nasty, brutish, and short."

Hobbes argued that to escape such a bleak life, people had to hand over their rights to a strong ruler. In exchange, they gained law and order. Hobbes called this agreement the "social contract." People agreed to a government that would protect them from the chaos of the state of nature. Hobbes said that rulers needed total power to keep citizens under control. The best government was one that had the greatest power of a monarch (one emperor). In Hobbes's view, such a government was an absolute monarchy, which could impose order and prevent rebellion.

Changing Mean: The Right to Govern

Old view	New view
A monarch was a god-like figure.	A government's power comes from the consent of the governed.

CONSEQUENCES

As in Europe, the major ideas of writers and philosophers in the Enlightenment produced a revolution in America. The United States became the first nation to put Enlightenment principles into practice. Enlightenment ideas inspired American leaders to create a new nation.

As a result, the American Revolution was a major event in the history of the world. It was a turning point in the history of the world, and it led to the creation of a new nation.
