In the second century of the Christian era, the empire of Rome comprehended the largest part of the earth, and the most civilized portion of mankind. The frontiers of that extensive empire were guarded by ancient customs and disciplined valor. The people had acquired influence of land and manners had gradually resembled the manners of the provincials. Their powerful institutions enjoyed and abused the advantages of wealth.

In former years, the public administration was conducted by the virtues and abilities of Scipio, Fabius, Cato, and the two Junians. It is the design of this and of the two succeeding chapters, to describe the prosperous condition of their empire; and afterwards, from the death of Marcus Antoninus, to declare the most important circumstances of its decline and fall; a revolution which will ever be remembered, and is still felt by the nations of the earth. The principal conquests of the Romans were achieved under the republic; and the emperors, for the most part, were satisfied with preserving those dominions which had been acquired by the policy of the senate, the active emulation of the consuls, and the martial enthusiasm of the people. The seven first centuries were filled with a rapid succession of triumphs; but it was
