

Key Ideas:

- Ingestion: taking food into the digestive system
- Digestion: breaking food down into molecules small enough to be absorbed into the bloodstream.
- Absorption: taking molecules into the bloodstream. This happens almost entirely in the small intestine (ileum)
- Assimilation: using food molecules to build new molecules in our bodies. I.e. the food molecule physically becomes part of our body.
- Egestion: Removing unwanted food from the digestive system (having a poo!). This is not excretion, because the unwanted food has never, technically, been inside the body.
- Peristalsis: the contraction of muscle in the intestine wall behind a bolus of food (ball of food). This pushes the bolus through the intestine.

Small intestine adaptations:

Adaptation	Explanation
Thin wall	The intestine wall is thin, which speeds the rate of diffusion of molecules into the blood
Rich blood supply	This helps carry absorbed molecules away from the intestine quickly. This means there is always a low concentration of food molecules in the blood, which maintains a high concentration gradient
Intestine length	Roughly 7m long, which increases the surface area
Surface Area	Villi and microvilli increase the surface area of the small intestine by 1000x
