

Unit 1: Biological molecule

3.1.1 Monomers and polymers

What is a monomer?
A small base subunit, which forms the building block of a larger molecule, called a polymer

What is a polymer?
A molecule made from a large number of similar / identical monomers joined together

Some examples of monomers and polymers

- Monosaccharide is polysaccharide (carbohydrates)
- Amino acid is polypeptide (protein)
- Nucleotide is DNA / RNA

Condensation reaction vs. hydrolysis reaction

- A condensation reaction...
- Joins 2 molecules together
 - Removal of a molecule of water (H_2O)
 - Formation of a chemical bond e.g. disulphide bond
- A hydrolysis reaction...
- Separates 2 molecules
 - Addition of a molecule of water (H_2O)
 - Breaking of a chemical bond

3.1.2 Carbohydrates

Condensation reaction

Forms a glycosidic bond

What is an isomer?

Isomers - when two molecules have the same molecular formula but different structural formulae

Unit 2: Cells

3.2.1.1 Structure of eukaryotic cells

Diagram of eukaryotic cells

Structure and function - cell surface membrane

- Phospholipid bilayer with embedded proteins etc.
- Selectively permeable - enables control of passage of substances in and out
- Barrier between internal and external environments of cell

Example exam questions
Required practical exam question workbook

Relationship between SA:V and metabolic rate

Surface area	SA ²	Vol ³	SA:V
surface	1m ²	1m ³	1m ⁻¹
surface area	100	1000	0.1

Relationship between SA:V (and thus the size of an organism) and metabolic rate

- Rate of heat loss / heat lost per unit body mass increases as SA:V increases
- i.e. much heat lost per unit body mass in smaller animals with a high SA:V
- So they need a higher metabolic rate / faster respiration
- To generate enough heat to maintain a constant body temperature i.e. replace lost heat

Adaptations to facilitate exchange as this rate reduces in larger organisms include changes to body shape and the development of systems

- Larger organisms need a specialised surface / organ for gaseous exchange e.g. lungs
- Because they have a smaller SA:V and a long diffusion pathway (and air is saturated) i.e. get tight
- As well as having a high capacity for oxygen and to remove carbon dioxide

- Sequence of DNA bases that codes for:
 - The amino acid sequence of a polypeptide
 - A functional RNA e.g. ribosomal RNA and tRNA
- A gene occupies a fixed position, called a locus, on a particular DNA molecule

The nature of the genetic code

- Sequence of DNA bases (or called codons) codes for sequence of amino acids
 - DNA triplet sequence of 3 bases coding for specific amino acid
 - e.g. TTT codes for tyrosine
- Universal
 - The same specific DNA base sequence code for the same amino acids in all living organisms
 - e.g. GAA codes for glutamic acid in all organisms
- Non overlapping
 - Each time, each base can only be used once and in only one triplet
- Degenerate
 - The same amino acid can be coded for by more than one base triplet
 - e.g. tyrosine can be coded for by TTT or TAT

In eukaryotes, much of the DNA doesn't code for polypeptides

- Between genes
 - Regulating multiple regions (or loci) called Transcription Factors (TFs) (and)
- Within genes
 - Regulating multiple regions (or loci) called Transcription Factors (TFs) (and)

Question 1: Explain why the rate of heat loss is an increase in proportion to the surface area.

Question 2: Describe how you might use a 3D model to measure the volume of a complexly shaped object.

Question 3: Explain the change in mass of a plant tissue when it is left in a solution of sucrose.
