Abstract

Background: VCT is the process by which an individual undergoes counseling enabling him or her to make an informed choice about being tested for HIV. This decision must be entirely the choice of the individual and he or she must be assured that the process will be confidential. This study aimed to assess the level of knowledge, attitude and practice of Voluntary Counseling and Testing (VCT) for HIV among Areka High school preparatory students in South Ethiopia.

Methods: A cross sectional study was conducted from January to to March, 2016 using a stratified sampling method to enroll students from their respective grades and department into the study. A total of 390 preparatory students were filed in a self-administered questionnaire. Main outcome measures were level of knowledge, attitude and practice of VCT for HIV. A chi-square test was used to determine an association between a number of independent factors and dependent variables. Results were presented using tables and figures and interpretation, discussion and recommendation was made finally based on the findings of this research.

Result: Out of all study participants 80.4% were knowledgeable on VCT, 67.4% had positive attitude towards VCT for HIV and 65.1% had had VCT for HIV in the past. Partners and self-trust, fear of stigma and discrimination, afraid to get the result, were reported as main barriers for VCT uptake.

Conclusion: Despite of high knowledge and favorable attitude towards VCT, there is poor practice towards it. There is a need to work on awareness creation on uptake of VCT.

1. Background

Since the first case of HIV/AIDS was reported in 1981 infection has grown to pandemic proportion, resulted in as estimated about 65 million deaths. And an estimated 34 million people were living with HIV at the end of 2010. Teens and adult, particularly adults and young women continue to be at the center of the epidemics. An estimated 2.7 million people worldwide were newly infected with HIV in 2010 and 390,000 children were newly infected with HIV in 2010; 30% fewer than the peak of 560,000 annual new infection children, in 2002 and 2003 [12].

VCT is the process by which an individual undergoes counseling enabling him or her to make an informed choice about being tested for HIV. This decision must be entirely the choice of the individual and he or she must be assured that the process will be confidential [9].

VCT is an effective strategy for facilitating behavioral change around both preventing HIV as well as getting early access to care and support. It is also instrumental in bringing about behavioral change, reducing unprotected sex and helping reduce the incidence of HIV and other STIs [10]. However, the availability of VCT services in Ethiopia has been uneven, and even when available, uptake has been relatively low [11].

Many countries have been trying to take many different approaches in an attempt to slow the spread of HIV infection and minimize its impact on the individual, family and society. Among these strategies include: voluntary counseling and testing (VCT), provider initiated counseling and testing (PICT), diagnosis of HIV in infants and young children, family care and partner testing and counseling based on index case, condom promotion and provision, detection and management of sexually transmitted infections, safer sex and risk reduction counseling, male circumcision, targeted interventions for sex workers and homosexuals [7]. Among these VCT is internationally recognized as an effective and important strategy for both prevention and care of HIV [8].

Ethiopia, as a country in the Sub-Saharan region, is a country with high HIV prevalence. According to
