As a consequence, the 1990s saw the rise of the "new" internationalism, which emphasized the role of the state in the development of the economy. This new internationalism was based on the idea that the state should play a more active role in the economy, and that the economy should be more integrated with the rest of the world. This new internationalism was based on the idea that the state should play a more active role in the economy, and that the economy should be more integrated with the rest of the world.

During the 1980s, the American Medical Association (AMA) and the American College of Physicians (ACP) issued the Physician and the Patient, a book that stressed the importance of the physician-patient relationship. The book emphasized the importance of the physician's role in the patient's life, and the importance of the patient's role in the physician's life. The book also emphasized the importance of the physician's role in the patient's life, and the importance of the patient's role in the physician's life.
