Household Debt, Consumption, and Monetary Policy in Australia Ms. Elena Loukoianova, Yu Ching Wong, Ioana Hussiada, 2019-04-05 This paper discusses the evolution of the household debt in Australia and finds that while higher income and higher wealth households tend to have higher debt lower income households may become more vulnerable to rising debt service over time Then the paper analyzes the impact of a monetary policy shock on households current consumption and durable expenditures depending on the level of household debt The results corroborate other work that households response to monetary policy shocks depends on their debt and income levels In particular households with higher debt tend to reduce their current consumption and durable expenditures more than other households in response to a contractionary monetary policy shocks However households with low debt may not respond to monetary policy shocks as they hold more interest earning assets

What Drives Mortgage Default Risk in Europe and the U.S.? Mr. Marco Gross, Mr. Thierry Tresselt, Xiaodan Ding, Eugen Tereanu, 2022-04 We present an analysis of the sensitivity of household mortgage probabilities of default PDs and loss given default LGDs on unemployment rates house price growth interest rates and other drivers A structural micro macro simulation model is used to that end It is anchored in the balance sheets and income expense flow data from about 95 000 households and 230 000 household members from 21 EU countries and the U S We present country specific nonlinear regressions based on the structural model simulation implied relation between PDs and LGDs and their drivers These can be used for macro scenario conditional forecasting without requiring the conduct of the micro simulation We also present a policy counterfactual analysis of the responsiveness of mortgage PDs LGDs and bank capitalization conditional on adverse scenarios related to the COVID 19 pandemic across all countries The economics of debt moratoria and guarantees are discussed against the background of the model based analysis

Has Higher Household Indebtedness Weakened Monetary Policy Transmission? Mr. R. G. Gelos, Mr. Tommaso Mancini Griffoli, Mr. Machiko Narita, Federico Grinberg, Umang Rawat, Shujaat Khan, 2019-01-15 Has monetary policy in advanced economies been less effective since the global financial crisis because of deteriorating household balance sheets This paper examines the question using household data from the United States It compares the responsiveness of household consumption to monetary policy shocks in the pre and post crisis periods relating changes in monetary transmission to changes in household indebtedness and liquidity The results show that the responsiveness of household consumption has diminished since the crisis However household balance sheets are not the culprit Households with higher debt levels and lower shares of liquid assets are the most responsive to monetary policy and the share of these households in the population grew Other factors such as economic uncertainty appear to have played a bigger role in the decline of households responsiveness to monetary policy
