Hurricane Tracking Lab

Purpose: The goal of this lab is to explore how weather conditions change when a hurricane moves through an area. By studying the (storm's) shifts in alt. pressure, wind speed, temperature, and rainfall during the 1928 Okechobee hurricane's path over San Juan, Puerto Rico, you will learn about the effects hurricanes have on local weather. This lab will help you understand how powerful storms impact our environment and the extreme changes they bring.

Background: The 1928 Okechobee hurricane was one of the deadliest hurricanes in the recorded history of North America. This system developed just offshore of the west coast of Africa on September 4th, 1928. Around midday on September 13, the storm strengthened into a Category 5 hurricane and peaked with sustained winds of about 160 mph. About six hours later, the system made landfall in Puerto Rico. It remains the only recorded Category 5 hurricane to strike the island as of 2018. Hurricane Maria struck Puerto Rico as a Category 4 hurricane.

Very strong winds resulted in severe damage in Puerto Rico, throughout the island an estimated 14,708 homes were destroyed and 192,444 were damaged, leaving over 100,000 people homeless. Heavy rainfall also led to extreme damage to vegetation and agriculture. On Puerto Rico alone, there were 312 deaths and about $50 million ($71.3 million today) in damage. While crossing the island and emerging into the Atlantic, the storm weakened slightly, falling to Category 4 intensity. The storm began striking through the Bahamas on September 14, where it resulted in 18 fatalities.

Early on September 17, the storm made landfall near West Palm Beach, Florida, with winds of 145 mph. In the city, more than 5,700 homes were destroyed.
