ACCURATE PINNING

Pin close to or directly on what will be folded edges for your symmetrical garment; for example, the CF and CR, or on darts or SAs. When learning to drape people often pin too far away from what will eventually be a stitch line; this causes the drawn guide lines to shift or be pinned incorrectly and inaccurately from the outset.

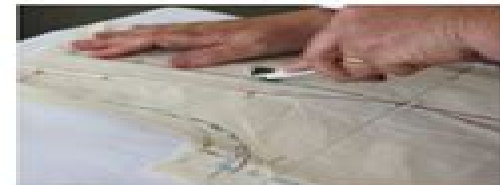

Fig. 5.13 Using tracing wheel to trace off draps onto paper.

after it has been trimmed down, with all amendments marked up, can be seen in Fig. 5.12.

The Master Pattern

This is where all the information on the calico is traced off onto paper with a tracing wheel, including grain lines and notches (Fig. 5.13). The master is only created after the draps have been altered and traced up. It is the first plan for a design and is 'nett', meaning it does not include any SA. The master serves the same purpose as a block used in traditional two-dimensional pattern drafting and is never cut up or used directly on fabric. Instead, it is used to trace off onto more paper, where it can also be altered (with new style lines, seam and hem allowances, yokes, button wraps and so on) to turn it into a production pattern or working pattern for a variety of new designs. This is what is used on fabric in preparation for cutting out and machining to construct the garment.

Creating the Master Pattern

Fig. 5.14 shows what you are aiming for, in this case a longline darted bodice. The same method is used for this process regardless of the garment type and works by systematically positioning the pieces along a horizontal and vertical axis:

1. On a piece of pattern paper draw a vertical line all the way down the
