

Barthes' Invitation to Urban Semiology

Friday was the day of meeting Roland Barthes. Before encountered only through some poor translations of his French manuscripts, today he came closer in a friendly presence. The first was of course the Eiffel's Tower, who he gently describes (as quoted in AA files, 2/2012) as the one element he has in common with all his Paris friends. Indeed, it is everywhere.

Following was the close reading of "Semiology and the Urban" found in Rethinking Architecture: A Reader in Cultural Theory, by Neil Leach. (1997). Amazingly, for the first time Barthes appeared clear, straight to the point, and also somewhere on the common ground.

In his text he makes an approach to convince, or better invite, planners and architects to take a look on the possibilities of converging the spheres of semiology and urban thinking. It might be the describing of himself as an amateur of semiology that makes the text so open and frankly inviting.

After an overview of the current state of semiology, its possible application to urban planning is analysed. The latter criticized for the flattering of the city informative layers into a set of similarly assessed elements, while instead the city shall be constituted by strong and neutral elements, the "marked and unmarked". Hence, signification is standing in opposition to objective (quantified) data, such as maps.

Barthes' invitation comes from his promise of making a scientific leap forward, once the speaking of the language of the city is conceived without the metaphoric sense of language. In order to achieve that, three hints might be helpful:

- no more lexicons – distinction has to be made between the paradigmatic nature, and the (traditional) semantic dimension of the symbol. The words should be understood rather as dynamically contextualized signifying vehicles rather than self contained packages of meaning. This route may lead to the usage of the Metapolis Dictionary of Advanced Architecture,
- it is all of us who are the readers of the city and we have to learn its discourse. In-

Semiology And The Urban:

Rethinking Architecture Neil Leach, 2005-12-20 Brought together for the first time the seminal writing on architecture by key philosophers and cultural theorist of the twentieth century Issues around the built environment are increasingly central to the study of the social sciences and humanities The essays offer a refreshing take on the question of architecture and provocatively rethink many of the accepted tenets of architecture theory from a broader cultural perspective The book represents a careful selection of the very best theoretical writings on the ideas which have shaped our cities and our experiences of architecture As such Rethinking Architecture provides invaluable core source material for students on a range of courses

Meaning in the Urban Environment M. Krampen, 2013-05-13 This book was first published in 1979 The City and the Sign M. Gottdiener, Alexandros-Ph Lagopoulos, 1986-03-02 Handbook of Urban Studies Ronan

Paddison, 2001 The Handbook of Urban Studies provides the first comprehensive up to date account of the urban condition relevant to a wide readership from academics to researchers and policymakers It provides a theoretically and empirically informed account embracing all the different disciplines contributing to urban studies Leading authors identify key issues and questions and future trends for further research and present their findings so that where appropriate they are relevant to the needs of policymakers Using the city as a unifying structure the Handbook provides an holistic appreciation of urban structure and change and of the theories by which we understand the structure development and changing character of cities

The Urban Condition Ghent Urban Studies Team, 1999 What does the Western city at the end of the twentieth century look like How did the modern metropolis of congestion and density turn into a posturban or even postsuburban cityscape What are edge cities and technoburbs How has the social composition of cities changed in the postwar era What do gated communities tell us about social fragmentation Is public space in the contemporary city being privatized and militarized How can the urban self still be defined What role does consumer aestheticism have to play in this These and many more questions are addressed by this uniquely conceived multidisciplinary study The Urban Condition seeks to interfere in current debates over the future and interpretation of our urban landscapes by reuniting studies of the city as a physical and material phenomenon and as a cultural and mental arte fact The Ghent Urban Studies Team responsible for the writing and editing of this volume is directed by Kristiaan Versluys and Dirk De Meyer at the University of Ghent Belgium It is an interdisciplinary research team of young academics that further consists of Kristiaan Borret Bart Eeckhout Steven Jacobs and Bart Keunen The collective expertise of GUST ranges from architectural theory urban planning and art history to philosophy literary criticism and cultural theory
