

Classifying Customers Using IBM SPSS Modeler (V16) is an intermediate level course that provides an overview of how to use IBM SPSS Modeler to predict the category to which a customer belongs. Students will be exposed to rule induction models such as CHAID and C and R Trees. They will also be introduced to traditional statistical models and machine learning models. Students who take examples include limited address a customer profiles to predict pre-qualified and another a customer response to a particular advertising campaign. Although this course focuses on classifying customers (including business, corporate, employees, and so forth), this techniques can also be applied to business questions such as predicting breakdown of machine parts.

OBJECTIFS

- Explain the concept of first independent level and its implications for selecting a modeling technique
- Determine the classification model to use
- Explain how CHAID grows a tree
- Customize tree options in the CHAID node
- Using Traditional Statistical Models
- Explain key concepts for Neural Net
- Customize tree option in the Neural Net node

PUBLIC

This intermediate course is for IBM SPSS Modeler Analysts who have completed the Introduction to IBM SPSS Modeler and Data Mining course who want to become familiar with the modeling techniques used to classify customers in IBM SPSS Modeler. This includes data analysis and analyzing business users.
