Following their arrival back at the barracks, approximately 2000 soldiers were sent to the camp to help with the decontamination process. While a small unit was sent to assist with the decontamination of the soldiers, the majority of the soldiers were sent to the barracks to be decontaminated. Most of the soldiers were sent to the barracks to be decontaminated and given the necessary medical attention. The soldiers were given a full medical examination and a full decontamination process. The soldiers were then sent to the barracks to be decontaminated and given the necessary medical attention.
