Lee,2019-09-10 An engaging look at how debates over the fate of literature in our digital age are powerfully conditioned by the nineteenth century s information revolution What happens to literature during an information revolution How do readers and writers adapt to proliferating data and texts These questions appear uniquely urgent today in a world of information overload big data and the digital humanities But as Maurice Lee shows in Overwhelmed these concerns are not new they also mattered in the nineteenth century as the rapid expansion of print created new relationships between literature and information Exploring four key areas reading searching counting and testing in which nineteenth century British and American literary practices engaged developing information technologies Overwhelmed delves into a diverse range of writings from canonical works by Coleridge Emerson Charlotte Bront Hawthorne and Dickens to lesser known texts such as popular adventure novels standardized literature tests antiquarian journals and early statistical literary criticism In doing so Lee presents a new argument rather than being at odds as generations of critics have viewed them literature and information in the nineteenth century were entangled in surprisingly collaborative ways An unexpected historically grounded look at how a previous information age offers new ways to think about the anxieties and opportunities of our own Overwhelmed illuminates today s debates about
